I have determined elsewhere that the number of “replaced” antiphons between pre-1911 and post-1911 is 47. This is confirmed by the numbers I reached in my hypothetical proposal. I had 56 antiphons I was not able to integrate. 56 minus 1 for psalm 30 (which did not have an antiphon in my scheme, since it was at Compline under one antiphon with the others, but which did have an antiphon in both the pre- and post-1911 schemas), minus 6 for divisi that I didn't use in my proposal (but which, if they were used, would allow these antiphons to be used), minus 11 for Lauds II that I didn't include but which are (by the nature of Lauds II) “alternate” anyway, minus 1 for psalm 149 which has its own unique antiphon post-1911 but which antiphon in my schema I replaced with a pre-1911 antiphon properly quoting psalm 150 (because the Laudate psalms are grouped traditionally). This gives 37 conflicts, to which must be added 2 for psalms (53, 62) that are repeated in my scheme (but where there would be a conflict if they only occurred once), and another 2 for alleluia ones that I turned into T.P. antiphons but which were per annum Sunday antiphons in Pius X's scheme (118 at Sext, and 118 at None) and so would have been a conflict, and then 5 for the Canticles where I included alternate antiphons “for Lent” from Lauds II post-1911 but where (if they only had one slot) there would have been a conflict, plus 1 for psalm 103 where I included the post-1911 antiphon, but with the next divisi rather than its proper one. This is 47, which is also the number I reached simply counting conflicts directly even separate from my hypothetical proposal.

I have also elsewhere determined that 57 “free spots” remain even after all possible spots have been filled by supplementing with pre-1911 antiphons; so these represent psalms, divisi, or Canticles which never had an associated antiphon of any sort. As a check this same number is confirmed by the numbers I reached in my hypothetical proposal. I had 49 blank spaces. 49 minus 4 that would be for purely seasonal antiphons, minus 5 for the repetition of 66, minus 5 for the repetition of 53, minus one for a blank space that only resulted because I turned a per annum antiphon into a paschal antiphon at Terce. This is 34 blanks. Then add 10 for two extra spots at each of the Little Hours (which in my schema would be under 1 antiphon), plus 1 for the 103 antiphon where there is actually a conflict as described above, plus 1 for the new Daniel canticle that I simply combined with the old one, plus 1 for psalm 94 which previous psalters include only as the Invitatory, plus 10 for divisi that could be re-expanded (that I did not include) but which still wouldn't have antiphons. This is 57 blank spots, which is also the number I reached simply counting free spaces directly even separate from my hypothetical proposal.
